

Conquest represents the tides of war, as realms seize control and do battle across the Hundred Realms. Land is one of the most valuable assets that can be controlled, allowing resources to be gathered to fund a realm, borders to be secured, and treasures to be uncovered.

The next year's wars can be predicted by submitting orders and plans to the Oracular Mirror, and receiving the results. This page details how to manage your Realm and play the Conquest game. Importantly, it is worth noting that the battles foretold in Conquest will come to pass over the course of the next year (between events), but by the end of the Event will not yet have happened.

Conquest Table

- The conquest table shows the map of the Hundred Realms, who controls which areas, and where key assets are located.
- Only the conquest refs may touch the conquest tables, but while the tables are open anyone is free to view them.
- Each territory may contain a number of things:
 - Resources: territories may generate resources for the realm that controls it. This usually takes the form of a number of Beans and or Coins, which will be listed on the territory. Resources will be collected in strongholds for the realm, so if a realm does not control a stronghold then their supplies will become inaccessible.
 - Strongholds: major fortifications that exist within a territory. These provide additional defense for anyone who controls the territory.
 - Forces: Large armies that are at the bidding of realms. These are used to conquer new lands, and defend borders.
 - Other things: There may be a host of other things that appear on the conquest table. Often these will be things you may want to find out more about, but you will require the blessing of whoever controls the territory before you may Quest in those lands to discover more. You may also ask the Conquest Refs for more information about these.

Conquest Phases

- Everything on the Conquest Table runs on Phases corresponding to the seasons: Summer, Autumn, Winter, Spring, and Midsummer.
- At the start of the phase, the table will be opened, and at the end, the table will be closed, after which Orders and (Conquest) spells will be resolved.
- Each Phase, a General may submit Orders, by presenting their Crest to one of the Conquest

Refs (or sending someone to do so in their stead) . Orders will only be resolved at the end of the current phase, so you may not submit orders for multiple phases at once.

- Each Phase, a Monarch may collect Resources generated by the Territories in their Realm by presenting their crest (or sending someone to do so in their stead) to One of the Conquest Refs . These do not accumulate if not collected. If a Realm has no Monarch or nobody to go in their stead then its Resources cannot be collected. Resources will be collected in Strongholds for the realm, so if a realm does not control a Stronghold then that realm will not be able to collect supplies.
- When the Conquest table is open, anyone may cast a Spell on the Conquest table by handing the Spell to one of the Conquest Refs. This Spell will only be activated and resolved after the phase has ended, before the rest of the orders are resolved.
- There are 5 Phases per event, times listed here. These Phases are 2 hours long.

Orders will not last between phases. Once an order has been submitted, it cannot be taken back

Resources

Some Territories will generate Resources each phase. These are usually in the form of Beans and Coins. The Resources generated by the Territory will be marked on the Conquest map. Resources for each realm may be collected by presenting the Monarch's Crest for a realm, though this may be given to anyone. Resources may only be collected by a Realm if it has control of at least one Stronghold.

Though Resources will persist between Phases (and between Events), Realms should endeavour to ensure someone is sent to collect the Resources every Phase. Resources can be collected at any point in each Phase as long as the Conquest table is open.

Controlling the World

The Hundred Realms has always been a place of war, and with no clear leader, many Realms attempt seize whatever lands they can. To do so, forces from each Realm roam about under control of their generals, to both defend their own Realms, and to conquer new territories.

Orders

Each Force can perform one Order per phase There are a number of free Orders that a force can do, that require no additional cost. They can roughly be grouped into 3 different types:

Attacking/Defending:

By default, a Territory has strength 0. Each Force and Stronghold in a territory increases the strength of that territory by 1. In order for an enemy to move into a Territory, it must first be overwhelmed, by reducing the strength of the Territory to 0 or less. There are two orders which can affect the strength

- Fortify the current Territory to increase its Strength by 1 for the rest of the Phase (note the unit already has a passive increase to the strength of the territory by being in it).
- Attack a specified adjacent Territory to reduce its Strength by 1 for the rest of the Phase. The attacking Force does not move.

Movement:

If a Territory is friendly, or has strength is at 0 or less after Attacks, Fortifies, and Spells have been resolved, then a Territory may be moved into. Depending on the type of movement a force does, may or may change the ownership of the Territory it has moved into. If multiple Realms are attempting to move into a territory, the total number of Move, Invade, and Support orders for each realm will be combined, and the Realm with the highest total successfully moves into the territory, with other competing orders failing.

- Move into a specified adjacent Territory with Strength 0 or lower, or belonging to the same Realm as the Force. This does not claim the Territory.
- Invade into a specified adjacent Territory with Strength 0 or lower. If successful, this claims the Territory for the attacking Realm.
- Support the Invade Order of another Force. This counts as an Invasion, but if successful the Force will not enter the Territory and it will be ceded to the Force you supported. Mutual Support orders fail - someone must be leading the Invasion.

Disbanding:

This is the simplest type of Order. Disbanding is the process of getting rid of a force on the table. There is only one disband Order

- Disband the Force (which will be removed from the table) and provide 10 Beans to the Realm which can be collected in the same way any resources can be collected during the next conquest phase.

There are a number of special moves that require additional resources to perform. Often these moves are non-standard, and might not be orders given to an existing force. There are many special Orders that might exist, but only some of them are known. In order to submit special Order, you need to pay the cost to one of the Conquest Refs, and say which special Order that you want. You will be given a card for the special Order that can be submitted in the same way as a normal order a normal order. Note that once you have the special Order card it is your responsibility to look after it, and it will only take effect if you submit it.
